Rosanne Cash's latest album, 'The List', is a deeply personal and moving tribute to her Southern roots and the music that has shaped her life. The album is a collection of covers of songs by some of Cash's favorite Southern artists, including Johnny Cash, June Carter Cash, Carl Perkins, Roy Orbison, Elvis Presley, and Sam Phillips.

Cash's decision to record an album of covers was inspired by a list of songs that her father, Johnny Cash, gave her when she was a teenager. The list included some of the most iconic songs in country music history, and Cash said she was "honored and humbled" to have the opportunity to record them.

"These songs are part of my DNA," Cash said. "They're the songs that I grew up with, and they're the songs that have always inspired me."

Cash's renditions of these classic songs are both respectful and innovative. She stays true to the spirit of the originals, but she also brings her own unique style and interpretation to each track. The result is an album that is both nostalgic and fresh, and that is sure to please fans of both Cash and Southern music.

In addition to the covers, 'The List' also includes two original songs written by Cash. The first, "When I Call Your Name", is a beautiful and haunting ballad about lost love. The second, "The Road", is a powerful and uplifting anthem about the journey of life.
